A HORSE OF A DIFFERENT COLOR

At its inception in 1875, the Kentucky Derby was designed to be a show of pageantry as well as a horse race—a vision of Meriwether Lewis Clark, Jr. Clark appealed to those of elevated stature to attend the elite event. Fancy attire became the norm, as it was indicative of such stature at the time. The more eye-catching and fashionable, the better, and this included ladies' headwear.

Clark's initial vision set the stage for the fashion fanfare of the Kentucky Derby, which occurs May 6-7 this year. Among the sea of polished suits and designer day wear are many women donning ornately extravagant hats, which are not only tradition, but also a source of good luck.

Speaking of good luck, what are some other race rituals?

- Something known as a hot brown sandwich is commonplace during Derby days. Back in the 1920s, the Brown Hotel created the upscale offering that's transitioned into a Derby delicacy. Tomato, bacon and turkey are topped with Mornay sauce on thick toast in an open-face display.
- Bourbon is the staple liquor. Old Forester and Woodford Reserve are the former and current brands of choice.
- Naturally, bourbon would be a key ingredient in the traditional Derby drink, the Mint Julep. It was served back in 1875 and now more than 120,000 are served annually.
